ThExperts at the European Development Days in Stockholm

October, 22-24

ThExperts takes part in the European Development Days to present the specific web tool created to enhance capacity and utilisation of best practices to be made available to all Imprest Administrators, Accounting Officers and TAT (Technical Assistance Teams).

ThExperts, a newly created non-profit association among a group of international experts, has created and is making available a web-based management tool with the aim to assist project managers in enhancing the quality level in managing Development Aid Programmes in the frame of the decentralised system.

This software system, completely free of charge, is built on open source tools (PHP and MySQL) and can be installed and run through the internet or the project intranet if all the stakeholders are located within the same location; it is accessed and operational by default installed browsers without having to install any additional components.

The tool is composed by four main modules: programme estimate management, procurement and contract management, grant scheme management, built-in visibility website.

In addition, ThExperts can offer several services related to the utilisation of the tool, such as identification and formulation of project mission, development of programme estimate, procurement planning and implementation, financial management, visibility, information and communication assistance, programme monitoring and evaluation, financial and technical audit and –last but not least - training activities.

Organised by the European Commission in cooperation with the Presidency of the European Union, European Development Days are Europe's foremost platform for dialogue and Exchange on International development issues worldwide. One of the main issues covered by the manifestation is the improving of management capacity building to enhance quality on development aid: ThExperts is pleased to having presented its new product at the Development Village.
